The FAREWELL, To Miss A. S. Mors Mortis Marti Mortem nift Merte dediffet,

The terne Vita Janua chaufe foral. SAY, oh my Heart, and fay in Verse sincere, (For far be Flatt'ry from the Lady's Ear) hiow much thou lov'st her: Let thy Verses tell To thee how killing is the Word FAREWELL! Surely no Flatt'ry can be; fure no Lays Can ever reach to Half her Due of Praise. Such wond'rous Beauty Men must needs adore; For why? So charming none was e'er before! Her Graces far furpas all Womankind: She far exceeds them in the Gifts of Mind. For such high Worth too feeble is my Lay, Where Wildom shines, and Virtue pure as Day, Good Nature charms, and Wit and Sense combine, And lovely Sweetness crowns the Maid divine. Like Life I lov'd her-now, alas! she's gone, And lest me hopeless, spiritless, undone Oppress'd with Griefs, in melancholy Pain, My Tears o'erstowing like the falling Rain! Sighs follow Sighs deep bursting from my Breast, And heavy Groans—My Soul refuses Rest.— The Heart-felt Loss for ever I deplore Of that dear Maid my Eyes shall see no more; No more, till Nine long tiresome Months are gone, And Spring return ker and the circ'ling Sun, To bless these Plains. Would Death's unerring Dark Might ease my Griefs, and strike me to the Heart. Once blest and happy! Now, no Words can tell How much it's worse than Death to say FAREWELL!

By giving the above Lines a Place in the Maryland Gazette, the Printer will oblige the disconsolate PHILANDER.

"H' officious Thief with Praise purloin'd, Who gibbets Sturca to the Wind, Who speeds his peison'd Dart, Who DARES NOT tempt the dang'rous Light, But mussled in the Shades of Night Wou'd play the Champion's Part.

(Lend Ate, Goddess, lend thy Ear Propitious to my fervent Pray'r!) ALL Ills in One betide! Let ONE GRAND CURSE but vex his Life

Sufficient for Despair and Strife. LET STURCA BE HIS BRIDE!

I take the Liberty to fend you a small Specimen of my poetic Vein. I can affure you, fuch as it is, 'tis all my own. My Maid put into my Hands your Paper with Hibe's Performance in it, when she brought up the Tea-things this Morning for Breakfast; I instantly caught the pleasing Insection, and pouring Half a Cup of the Water of Aganippe (which I always keep by me) on some of Twining's best Hy-fon, I chimed it off in a Trice; and if this Fruit of my Inspiration shall be so happy as to meet with Approbation, my Talent for the future shall not lye idle, and I hope my dear Hebe will not decline my Invitation to take an Airing every other Week in the Poets Corner, for the Entertainment of herself, her Friends, and the Publick.

PHÆBE.
